

About the NeighborWorks® Training Institute

The NeighborWorks® Training Institute is the source for state-of-the-art community and economic development education. The Training Institute produces approximately 50 national and regional educational events across the country each year – training more than 3,500 community development practitioners who are joined in the classroom by participants from local, state and national government and private sector partners. These events provide an ideal forum for convening key players to learn together, sharing their viewpoints and best practices, as well as collaborating on important issues and initiatives related to affordable housing and community development. Participants receive a certificate of completion that may count toward the requirements for a professional certificate in a program of study.

NeighborWorks® Training Institute is committed to providing superior practical education that combines the benefits of peer-to-peer networking and learning with the development of tools and skills that will be called upon – in the field, at the local level – time and again.

The Rocky Mountain District of Neighborhood Reinvestment is pleased to bring the NeighborWorks® Training Institute to Denver, Colorado. This Training Institute, which offers many courses and events within a regional framework, will provide participants from the Rocky Mountain States and Texas the opportunity to build skills, network with colleagues and share ideas for taking their community development work to the next level.
